Overview

Daniel has considerable expertise in quantitative data collection and analysis. He designs user-friendly online data portals which can be used to report on program outputs and outcomes. Daniel also provides helpdesk functions for organizations collecting data through online systems.

Prior to working at Health in Common, Daniel implemented and managed the OttoCYCLE project at the Centre for Sustainable Transportation (CST), tracking cycling activity using GPS. He holds a Bachelor of Environmental Studies focusing on Environmental Communication and has 12 years of experience using websites and technology to communicate ideas.

Project Samples

Monitoring and data collection

Healthy Together Now – Developed an online reporting system that gathers information at the community level and provides reports at the regional and provincial level.

Laurel Centre – Developing an online data collection system that aligns data collection across the organization and generates reports, replacing a system requiring manual collation and calculations.

Evaluation project support

North Point Douglas Women's Centre – Evaluated the volunteer, counselling and safety programs, including developing accessible data collection tools, such as a community safety survey, youth outreach worker tracking forms, volunteer tracking forms, and a counselling client satisfaction survey. Interviews and focus groups were facilitated to collect data on program effectiveness.

Kelsey Recreation Commission, Northern Health Region & The Town of the Pas – Facilitated a participatory evaluation of One Step Ahead, a diabetes prevention initiative delivered through a partnership with the Northern Regional Health Authority, Kelsey Recreation Commission and the Town of the Pas. Support included utilization of findings.

Ka Ni Kanichihk – Facilitated a participatory evaluation of the All Children Matter (ACM) conference, a public awareness forum on the sexual exploitation of children in Manitoba.
